Introduction

Over the last twenty years all professions in Australia, or at least some parts of them, have adopted competency standards. These seek to provide explicit statements of what people need to be able to do to practice successfully as professionals.

What is a competency standard

In Australia, competency is commonly defined as the ability to perform activities in an occupational category or function to the standard expected in employment.

A competency standard is a document that specifies, in a structured format, the purpose of a particular job or role and how people should perform that job or role. Competency standards attempt to capture the various dimensions that, when taken together, account for 'competent' performance. In this case, the competency standard specifies the role of a migration agent.

Competency standards need to be based on an integrated approach to competence - one that combines agents' actual work tasks with the attributes that enable these tasks to be performed and the levels of performance expected.

Competency standards must be read as a whole. Instances in actual practice often involve two or more standards or elements. Although divided into domains with each domain sub-divided into elements and performance criteria, the individual standards are not discrete or independent. Each element is unweighted. The importance of a particular element or elements will be related to the actual circumstances surrounding the situation an agent finds themselves in from day to day.

For assessment purposes this means that performance on several elements can be assessed simultaneously. In the case of new, irregular or changing contexts, the standards may need to be interpreted or adapted to the situation. Such contextually-sensitive situational understanding requires informed professional judgement in order to comply with the spirit of the competency standards. They are also taken as a whole in the sense that competence is not directly observable. Rather, what is observable is performance on a series of relatively complex and demanding professional tasks. Competence is a global construct that is inferred from observed performance on a sufficiently representative range of tasks and activities.

What a competency standard is not

It is important to note that competency standards are not a curriculum document. They are a valuable guide to course developers, both at initial qualification and continuing professional development levels, but do not determine what must be taught, learnt or assessed. Each standard does not correspond with an academic unit and is not an indication of weighting for curriculum or assessments.

These competency standards have relevant underpinning knowledge that needs to be incorporated throughout the standards and elements. The competency standards endeavour to integrate underpinning knowledge and skills into the performance criteria for each element. As noted earlier these must also be considered as a whole and in the context of each unique situation that they might apply to.

Uses of competency standards

Competency standards can have numerous uses including:

- They are employed by universities and other higher education providers as an important guide for designing initial professional preparation courses and ongoing professional development programs.
- They provide a basis for entry into a profession.
- They provide a basis for determining and developing continuing professional development (CPD) and refresher course content.
- They can provide the public with direct knowledge of what might be expected of a professional in the migration agent occupation.
- They are a professional framework against which migration agents can measure their own performance and prepare a professional development plan so that competence is maintained and enhanced.
- They can provide guidance in the provision of mentoring to recent entrants to the occupation by more experienced migration agents.

Ethical practice and the Code of Conduct

All professions have a set of ethical standards, either written or inferred from custom and tradition. The key purpose statement for migrant agents mentions the need to act ethically and comply with the Code of Conduct. In these competency standards, the Code is specifically mentioned in some elements but it is relevant to all standards.

About this project

The competency standards for migration agents were developed and prepared for the use of the Office of the Migration Agents Registration Authority (MARA) by Andrew Gonczi Pty Ltd.

These competency standards were developed using a combination of techniques. In summary these were:

- Two practitioner workshops (Melbourne and Sydney)
- Two focus groups (Brisbane and Sydney)
- Critical incident interviews with practitioners (12 in total)
- Review of the draft competency standards by workshop, focus group and critical incident interview participants
- Review of the draft competency standards by current Graduate Certificate in Australian Migration Law and Practice providers
- Profession-wide review of the draft competency standards

At the completion of each of these steps, the project team further revised and refined the draft competency standards based on the feedback received.

This approach to identifying competencies and developing standards and indicators is based on an analysis that integrates actual key work tasks with the attributes required of the competent migrant agent. These attributes include knowledge, skills, dispositions, abilities and values. This approach has been used successfully with a large number of occupations including Nursing, Optometry, Dietetics, Osteopathy, Podiatry, Medical Science, and Law.

The workshops in Melbourne and Sydney involved a range of practitioners, selected to represent the variety of the contexts of the occupation. This included sole practitioners, pro bono agents working with refugee and humanitarian groups, accredited specialists, agents from larger firms - both legal and non-legal, MIA representatives and CPD providers. There was a mixture of experienced or very experienced agents and recent entrants to the occupation.

The focus groups held in Sydney and Brisbane were of a similar composition.

The practitioner workshops, focus groups and critical incident interviews took place in October and November 2010. The two practitioner workshops provided an initial draft of the competency standards. These were then further refined and expanded using the diverse input from the focus groups, critical incident interviews and relevant documents, particularly the Code of Conduct for migration agents set out in Schedule 2 to the Migration Agent Regulations 1998. The penultimate draft was then sent back to participants for a review.

The original conception of critical incidents interviews was developed by Flanagan (1954) as a technique used in the Defence Forces to identify the characteristics of successful performers in a variety of military fields. This technique has since been refined and widely used to refine and update professional competency standards. The critical incident interview attempts to unravel the tacit knowledge that experts use in successful performance. Like the workshops and focus groups, the critical incident interviewees were selected to represent a variety of the contexts of migrant agent practice.

About these competency standards

The competency standards that follow begin with a statement of purpose followed by nine standards and a description of the knowledge considered to underpin all the standards.

The key purpose of migration agents is a statement developed and refined by agents who have participated in the process to date.

Each standard consists of a table containing three to seven elements in Column 1. For each element, performance criteria are defined in column 2.

The underpinning knowledge for all standards defines the main sources of knowledge relevant to the purpose. It is not intended to represent all sources that might apply in a given circumstance

Key purpose of migration agents

Provide professional advice and assistance to organisations and individuals on Australian migration matters in an ethical manner and in accordance with the Code of Conduct.
